Description:

Few things impact our lives more than marketing, yet few people consider how that influence can be a force for good. Honorable Influence shines the light of Christian faith on the field, revealing how marketers can avoid negative impact, and instead influence consumers to their benefit. Individuals and organizations will find in Honorable Influence practical guidance for doing what seems impossible to many—using marketing to show love to God and others.

If you are a Christian who works in marketing or wants to, Honorable Influence is a book you need to read. I've had moments during my career in marketing where I struggled with the perception of marketing and wondered if I should switch gears to a profession that seems more "God-honoring". This book was influential in reassuring me that God calls many of us to build His Kingdom through careers in marketing. In Honorable Influence, David Hagenbuch teaches about ways to use marketing as a force for good, and ways that it can be used dishonorably. He provides a wealth of Biblical examples about marketing, from verses supporting the practice to examples of prominent figures utilizing it. Hagenbuch lays out the "Seven Sins of Influence" of which a marketer can fall into the trap of. These sins of influence include deception, coercion, manipulation, denigration, intrusion, encouraging overindulgence, and neglect. Practical examples are provided for each of how marketers participate in these sins and how we can avoid them. My favorite chapters were "Marketing and the Church" and "Christian Ethics in a Secular Workplace". In "Marketing and the Church", Hagenbuch differentiates marketing of the church and marketing in the church and explains how one is honoring to God and one isn't. "Christian Ethics in a Secular Workplace" provides excellent insight into communicating our values with those who don't believe in God. The only thing I would change about the book would be to add more outside perspectives or research. Overall, this book is a must-read for Christians in the marketing profession with valuable insight on how to properly use influence to glorify God.
